Political instability

Spain has been facing political instability for several years, with frequent changes in government and coalitions. The lack of a stable government has led to a slowdown in decision-making, and has created uncertainty for businesses and investors.

Economic recovery

Like many countries, Spain has been affected by the COVID-19 pandemic and the resulting economic downturn. There are concerns about unemployment and the impact on small businesses.

Immigration

Spain is a major destination for immigrants from Africa and the Middle East, and the country has struggled to cope with the influx of migrants. There have been debates around immigration policies and the treatment of immigrants in the country.

Aging population:

Spain has one of the lowest birth rates in Europe, and the population is aging. This presents a challenge for the country's pension system and healthcare system, as there will be fewer working-age people to support the growing number of retirees.

Education:

There are concerns about the quality of education in Spain, particularly in public schools. There have been protests and demonstrations by teachers and students, who are calling for improvements to the education system..

Corruption

Spain has struggled with corruption in politics and business for many years. There have been high-profile cases involving politicians, bankers, and business leaders, which have led to calls for stronger anti-corruption measures.

Gender inequality

Despite progress in recent years, Spain still faces significant gender inequality. Women continue to face discrimination in the workplace, and there have been protests and demonstrations calling for greater equality and women's rights..

SOCIAL WELFARE

In addition to unemployment benefits, there are various forms of social assistance available in Spain, such as housing subsidies and food aid. These programs are designed to support those who are struggling to make ends meet.

Housing

Spain is facing a housing crisis, with rising rents and a shortage of affordable housing. There have been protests and demonstrations calling for action to address the housing crisis, and there are debates around the role of the government in regulating the housing market.
